Not illustrated. 1865 Excerpt: .and as no other was due for several hours, Arthur had nothing to do but to wait. The day was rather cold, and as Arthur was looking about the little town to see what there was to amuse him, he beheld a small low dram shop. I should like something hot uncommonly, he thought, and in a moment more he was ordering a glass of hot whiskey and water. When again he went into the open air, he felt so giddy that it was with difficulty he mounted the box of the carriage to go back to the station. When Mr. Douglass arrived and saw the young man, he very naturally enquired after those at home, but Arthur gave such confused replies, that his master saw at once that he must be intoxicated. By this Arthur narrowly escaped losing a good place; indeed it was only because it was his first offence of the kind that he was allowed to keep it. Whether Arthur had sense enough to refrain from drinking, give up stealing, and keep his place long afterwards, we shall see by the sequel. CHAPTER IV. CONCLUSION. Ten years had now passed. To any person such a length of time must bring many changes, and our young emigrants had not been exceptional cases. In the comfortable parlour of a neat stone house (built from a quarry in the neighbourhood and standing in the midst of a good sized farm), a little party were gathered...
