Excerpt: .the state of the soul, and plainly shews the whole turn of your mind. If our blessed Lord used to pray early before day; if he spent whole nights in prayer; if the devout Anna was day and night in the temple: if St. Paul and Silas at midnight sang praises unto God; if the primitive Christians, for several hundred years, beside their hours of prayer in the day-time, met publicly in the churches at midnight, to join in psalms and prayers, is it not certain that these practices shewed the state-of their hearts? are they not so many plain proofs of the whole turn of their minds.-And if you live in a contrary state, wasting great part of every day in sleep, thinking any time soon enough to be at your prayers; is it not equally certain, that this practice as much shews the state of your heart, and the whole turn of your mind? So that if this indulgence is your way of life, you have as much reason to believe yourself destitute of the true spirit of devotion, as you have to believe the apostles and saints of the primitive church were truly devout.--For as their way of life was a demonstration of their devotion, so a contrary way of life is as strong a proof of a want of devotion. When you read the Scriptures, you see a religion that is all life, and spirit, and joy in God; that supposes...
