Neither Dyer² nor Green³ found intra-ocular hemorrhages in subjects that had been executed by hanging, although the latter observer noted numerous minute hemorrhages in the conjunctiva. In strangulated rabbits and dogs Baquis⁴ found serous infiltration of all the elements of the retina with a few extravasations from the distended veins. Forster, ⁵ however, mentions the finding of numerous retinal hemorrhages after death from suffocation. The effect, however, is different when the cause of the congestion is within the eye itself, as in the case of thrombosis of the central retinal vein, which will be described later. The congestion resulting from collapse and from paralysis of the vessels belongs to the condition known as acute passive hypersemia. This is observed, --1. In sudden diminution of intra-ocular tension. That form of diminished tension caused by operative incision into the eyeball has practical significance, as reported by Leber. ⁶ The writers observations in this line have been, that this hyperaemia in normal eyes is only slight, and that it is principally confined to the veins; only leading to extravasation of blood when the vessels are diseased, and in glaucoma. Retinal hemorrhages often occur in glaucomatous eyes after iridectomy, these being due to abnormal rigidity of the vessels (senile sclerosis). Under similar conditions disastrous chorioidal hemorrhages occasionally occur during cataract operations. 1 Die Ophthalmoscopie in der inneren Modicin, 1893.
